Two entertainments were given Friday night in honor of Halloween, which were highly enjoyable, and many young people were present. One was given by Miss Mary Lou Tucker and the other by Miss Louise Hickson. One was in the eastern and the other in the western section of the city. DECLINES THE CALL Rev. F. P. McFaden, the young divine who had a flattering call extended him by the congregation of the First Presby-terian church of this city, has written a lever, in which he courtsously declines to come to Danville. He writes that it is impossible for him to leave Marion. The charge here is an excellent one, and there is a splendid manse connected with the

The Sounding Knob and the Devil's

Backbone-Footfalls Beating a Bass-Drum-The Local Theory Reenriling the Knob. MONTEREY, VA., November 2.- (Speial.)-Within a few miles of this place end at points nearly equidistant north and south, are the Sounding Knob and he Devil's Backbone, two as great na-

State

Sounding Knob is a point on Jack mountain, and is comparatively easy of access from two or more directions. The approaches are through the heavy timber along the mountain sides, but the summit tself is free from timber, and during the summer season is covered by a beau tiful mantle of green, and is often resort ers. In walking across the surface, and especially if the foot be stamped, there is heard a deep, distinct rumbling sound, resembling somewhat the distant beating of a bass-from, and it requires no strain of the imagination to detect it THE LOCAL THEORY plored with a view to finding a subter-ranean passage leading beneath the knob, none has been found, and the phenomena. none has been found, and the phenomenor remains no less a curiosity than a mys-tery. It is elevated several hundred fee above the surrounding meadow and pas above the surrounding meadow and pas-ture lands, and affords a view that at once enraptures and bewilders the gaze. To the south, and in the far distance, loom up the Peaks of Otter, in Bedford county, and on every side, as far as the eye can reach, you behold the mountain ranges of the Appalachian system, with their innumerable spurs and ridges tun-ning in every direction, many of them re-combiling the crues of huse charts, their sembling the graves of huge giants, their heads pillowed upon the mountain sides and their feet resting in the valley be-DEVIL'S BACKBONE.

The sharp, craggy mountain top, six miles north of Monterey, which is irreverently dubbed the Devil's Backbone, which attracts the attention of every traveller, and is an object of interest even to those of us who see it every day.

The mountain spur thus curiously formed runs parallel with the south branch of the Potomac, and the summit for a mile or more of its length is sharp, resembling nor a little the back of a mammoth saw-fish, or poverty-stricken Bactrian camel, the protuberances being so close together and sharp as to scarcely leave a resting place for the sight-seer who is bold enough to attempt the rough ascent.
